MODERN PHILOLOGY

MASTER'S DEGREE

The second-level degree course in Modern Philology allows students to specialize in the study of literature and communication and to consolidate their knowledge of linguistics, philology, and of traditional and digital media studies.

The general aim of this degree course is to train second-level degree graduates who can work in publishing, advertising and research, as well as in the organisation and management of cultural events, digital and traditional communication and training.

The second-level degree course in Modern Philology, with its two curricular options:

1. Philology, and
2. Science of Letters and of Multimedia Communication, aims at providing a wide cultural background, with a specific focus on the philological-linguistic, literary criticism and communicative-linguistic sectors.

The degree course provides specialised training in language, literature and communication, including multimedia communication. It allows students to focus on the study of the Italian language and literature, of linguistic and philological sciences and of multimedia languages, while taking into account the historical, philosophical, anthropological, sociological and cultural context.
